TWO4SIX BLURS THE LINE BETWEEN PRIVATE OFFICE AND COLLABORATIVE SPACE

CHICAGO – June 15, 2015 – Nucraft today unveiled the Two4Six Collection at NeoCon 2015. Two4Six includes two distinct, yet related, collections of individual private office and meeting room furniture. A light scale and finely-crafted design give the Two4Six Collection an elegant posture while its ultimate value is realized through its seamless interplay with technology and its ability to maximize real-estate efficiency.

“Ubiquitous technology, increasing demand for impromptu collaboration and shrinking real-estate footprints are challenging organizations to do more with less,” said Two4Six designer Joey Ruitter. “Two4Six allows you to do more with less by blurring the line between the private office and collaborative space.”

Two4Six improves collaboration within the private office. Individuals can work autonomously and leverage the same Two4Six desk to effectively collaborate with one to three other individuals, without having to leave their office. The versatility of Two4Six private office enhances real estate investment and reduces stress on overbooked meeting rooms.

Two4Six meeting tables support short, impromptu meetings that take place in small collaborative spaces. Available in a broad selection of surface material and color options, Two4Six meeting tables include robust, yet inconspicuous, power and data connectivity as well as Nucraft's signature quality.

As an organization's facility needs change over time, Two4Six provides long-term flexibility. The same room can be transformed from an individual private office to a small meeting room, or flex-space, using the same Two4Six furniture.

Two4Six is designed by Joey Ruitter.
